One of the oldest restaurants in London's theatreland, Kettner's was founded in 1867 by Auguste Kettner, a former chef to Napoleon III. Kettner's was a French restaurant with a frisky reputation. A place where respectable diners and actresses could consort and indeed cavort, it is situated in four Georgian houses just behind the stage doors and has a secret passageway running to the Palace Theatre. Kettner's runs five floors over a warden of private rooms, known as Cabinets Particuliers, which were used by venues for a little Tête-à-Tête with dinner and champagne. Former regulars include Oscar Wilde and Bosie (it is mentioned in the trials), Lily Langtry, Agatha Christie and Bing Crosby.
